LICS was used as a comparator conference. Its current rank is A*, which was found to be justified. Indeed, LICS is the premier conference for topics in computer science that relate to logic. The conference publishes an average of around 80 paper per year (last 3 years). Its acceptance rate is around 40%, which is high for an A* conference. Its h5-index is 31, placing it in 10th place in Google Scholar's TCS venues. The conference has very strong citation data, strong PCs, and an excellent standing in the community.

Joanna Ochremiak and Annabelle McIver stood aside from this decision due to a COI.
